1. Lack of Formal Alumni and Employer Feedback Data

Both campuses highlight alumni and employer feedback as important but lack direct evidence of formal survey instruments, data analysis, or application of feedback loops. Structured survey mechanism is the only way forward as also mentioned in the SAR Report.

2. Weak Documentation of Strategic Plan Implementation

While both SARs mention strategic priorities, they lack specific measurable KPIs, timelines, or tracking mechanisms to operationalize the strategy.

3. Limited Data on Institutional KPIs

Metrics like student satisfaction scores, employer satisfaction rates, and teaching evaluation summaries are missing or marked as N/A in both reports.

4. Resource Constraints and Dependency

The SAR lacks details on digital library access, laboratory infrastructure, and advanced technological tools like LMS or case simulation software—suggesting tighter resource constraints than the main campus.

5. Faculty Development and Recognition Systems Not Evident

There is less emphasis on institutional mechanisms for faculty development, recognition, and motivation. No teaching awards or research incentives are mentioned
